Mahmet Kalyoncu : A Civilian Response to Ethno-Religious Conflict before purchasing it in order to gauge whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised A Civilian Response to Ethno-Religious Conflict:

This extensive analysis of the Mardin conflict in southeast Turkey considers the likelihood that socioreligious movements, such as the popular Glen movement, could effect positive change in ethnoreligious disputes, even those decades old. By focusing specifically on how Glen volunteers helped minimize the support of terrorist organizations in Anatolia, this guide illustrates how potent nonpolitical solutions to ethnic conflict can be.
