Published in 1949, the book is a thoughtful look at conservation then and a warning for the future. In some ways it is hopeful to see that people more than half a century ago recognized the need for less chemicals and the natural order of nature. In other ways it is disheartening to see that it has taken almost 70 years for sustainability, permaculture and the like to come back into vogue, when this is the way we should have been farming all along. The book is rich with description, filled with a thoughtfulness unlike what many in our face-paced world today take time to see. This is a book I will read and re-read many times. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Great expressive thoughts about nature and the wild By Writer Haven't finished it yet but his writing is much more expressive and poetic than I thought it would be. If you like trees, animals and nature you will like this clasic. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Walking with Leopold. By Mr. Green in the Library Written in 1949..a great read for those who are interested in and love nature. A secular viewpoint from Aldo Leopold, a naturalist, who knew and walked with the environment. Lovely descriptions and stories about animals, trees, etc.

First published in 1949 and praised in the New York Times Book Review as "a trenchant book, full of vigor and bite," A Sand County Almanac combines some of the finest nature writing since Thoreau with an outspoken and highly ethical regard for America's relationship to the land. As the forerunner to such important books as Annie Dillard's Pilgrim at Tinker Creek, Edward Abbey's Desert Solitaire, and Robert Finch's The Primal Place, this classic work remains as relevant today as it was nearly sixty years ago.

One of the seminal works of the environmental movement.
