comprehensive work I've read on India's Islamic history. The only issue I have with the book is that it doesn't go far enough into explaining the brutality of the Islamic conquerors of this land. While he does touch upon the subject of their brutality, he doesn't go far enough, which might lead a naive westerner reading the book to believe that the Islamic age of India was some kind of "golden period," which it most definitely wasn't. However, in spite of that one shortcoming, the sheer comprehensiveness of this volume and his superb attention to most other details earns it a five-star rating from me. 1 of 2 people found the following review helpful. Muslims have been present in South Asia for 14 centuries. Nearly 40% of the people of this vast land mass follow the religion of Islam, and Muslim contribution to the cultural heritage of the sub-continent has been extensive. This textbook provides both undergraduate and postgraduate students, as well as the general reader, with a comprehensive account of the history of Islam in India, encompassing political, socio-economic, cultural and intellectual aspects. Using a chronological framework, the book discusses the main events in each period between c. 600 CE and the present day, along with the key social and cultural themes. It discusses a range of topics, including: How power was secured, and how was it exercised The crisis of confidence caused by the arrival of the West in the sub-continent How the Indo-Islamic synthesis in various facets of life and culture came about Excerpts at the end of each chapter allow for further discussion, and detailed maps alongside the text help visualise the changes through each time period. Introducing the reader to the issues concerning the Islamic past of South Asia, the book is a useful text for students and scholars of South Asian History and Religious Studies.

"..the authors story is extremely well-told This will be a most accessible book, and most pleasingly his exposition, working over some heavily contested areas of history, is very well-balanced". Francis Robinson, Royal Holloway, University of London, UK Islamic Civilization in South Asia presents a solid account of Muslim power and presence in the Indian subcontinent. The books strength lies in its probing analysis of the political and socio-economic aspects of Indo-Muslim history, and will help students of South Asian Islam interrogate the relationship between power and knowledge and the political dimensions of cultural forms.
