Christina G. Rossetti : Time Flies: A Reading Diary before purchasing it in order to gauge whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Time Flies: A Reading Diary:

For every day in the year Miss Rossetti supplies some religious thought in prose or verse. The thought is shrewd and searching. It is free in its forms dialogue, exhortation, anecdote, reflection. The verses do not rise to the highest poetry, but they are of fair average excellence. Humour is not excluded in pointing a moral. Scriptural Studies. Christina G.

Rossetti's Time Flies: a Reading Diary, presents, for each day of the year, about a page of original matter in prose or verse, often associated with some event of the ecclesiastical calendar, and always of a religious or moralizing character. The prose and verse alike are pervaded with views of life and religion which are often fanciful, if not morbid, and little calculated to form a cheerful faith or to nourish a wholesome thoughtfulness of conscience. The Unitarian Review: 1886, Vol. 25
