From Naval Institute Press : Warship 2015 (Warship (Conway Maritime Press)) before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Warship 2015 (Warship (Conway Maritime Press)):

This year's edition was a bit arcane for me. The best section covered an obscure night action off Malaya in January, 1942 between two old British destroyers and a larger force of Japanese destroyers, smaller vessels, and one cruiser. The article was insightful and provocative, pointing out the high level of training British ships and crews had for night actions. Unfortunately, the limited evidence of Japanese negligence led to over-confidence among the Allies which may have helped lead to disaster at Savo Island a few months later. The book reviews are good, as is the appraisal of the latest US, British, and Indian aircraft carrier designs. The article on Japanese Shokaku-class carriers is of high quality, albeit with a surfeit of extraneous details. Other articles are obscure for my tastes, involving a French submarine, naval war in the Adriatic during World War I, and French battleship designs prior to World War I. This is the sort of title which makes an excellent addition to a library's reference section, but runs a bit expensive and obscure, even for knowledgeable naval enthusiasts. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. The string continues, Naval History at its finest! By Terry Sofian Another great volume in the premier annual series. Three wonderful articles on aircraft carriers from an un-built Italian design from the 1930s, the last prewar Japanese carrier class and a long discussion on current fixed wing carrier technology. Other articles cover circular Russian ironclads, an early surface engagement between British and Japanese surface forces in WW2, French battleships and several other topics. The top writers in naval history and technology are well represented. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Excellent articles, as usual. Most were very interesting. A couple were a bit boring. By Bayard B. The usual high quality articles from "Warship." A couple in this edition were kind of boring, I felt. The most interesting articles were: the Japanese Shokaku class aircraft carriers; the naval war in the Adriatic 1914 - 1916; the French Patrie class battleships of around 1900; and the Italian navy aircraft carrier project of the 1930s.

Warship 2015 is the 37th edition of the annual academic publication devoted to the design, development, and service history of the world's combat ships. This annual publication has been running since 1977 and is frequently referenced by authors and contributors to naval publications. This hardback collection features articles on a variety of subjects including "The Battleships of the Patrie Class," "Postwar Weapons in the Royal Navy," "The Tragedy of the Submarine Mariotte, Known as the 'Toothbrush,'" and "Developments in Modern Carrier Aviation." This latest volume contains original research from respected authorities such as Michele Cosentino, Peter Marland, Hans Lengerer, and Aidan Dodson. Detailed and accurate information is the keynote of every article, each of which is fully supported by plans, tables, and photographs. Warship 2015 maintains the high standards for research and scholarship in the field of warship history. It is an essential reference for naval historians and enthusiasts alike.

About the Author John Jordan was formerly a language teacher. He has written two major books on the Soviet navy. He recently co-authored French Battleships, 1922-56 with Robert Dumas. He has been associated with Warship from its beginning and took over as the editor in 2004.
