1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. one could easily place the facts in the proper categories to be ...By Steven C.Well done survey of world history. The important evolutionary trends of civilization were followed without attempting to place everything on a specific time line. The flexible approach to the presentation enabled the sweeps of history to be conceptualized without having to memorize all the facts and dates. The facts were there, however, one could easily place the facts in the proper categories to be remembered. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Trash History for Indoctrination Purposes Only By Paul Morris Mundane millionth iteration of "world history" it does not provide efficacious factual reporting on historical events or timelines and seems politically motivated with an opinionated writing style. Professors and students would do well to avoid this text if it's assigned to you, request another. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. A Fine Enough History Book By Braithwaite "Sir" This is a fine book packed full of information and photos but I wish modern history books were written more multi-dimensionally as opposed to linearly as life happens, like Toynbee used to write.

A truly global approach to world history built around significant world history stories. Worlds Together, Worlds Apart is organized around major world history stories and themes: the emergence of cities, the building of the Silk Road, the spread of major religions, the spread of the Black Death, the Age of Exploration, alternatives to nineteenth-century capitalism, the rise of modern nation-states and empires, and others. The Fourth Edition of this successful text has been streamlined, shortened, and features a new suite of tools designed to help students think critically, master content and make connections across time and place.

About the Author Robert Tignor (Princeton University) is Professor Emeritus and the Rosengarten Professor of Modern and Contemporary History at Princeton University and the former three-time chair of the history department. With Gyan Prakash, he introduced Princetons first course in world history nearly twenty years ago.
